Stirring Up the Card Table.

The English engraving firms which deal with Christmas cards usually have their slackest season at this time of the year their work having been completed. But the war has caused the temporary "scrapping" of the cards prepared for the coming Christmas, and a new stock, with patriotic and other appropriate devices, is being got ready. As a result, the engravers are working overtime, and British printers are securing a lot of work generally done in Germany and Austria.—Pall Mall Gazette.
